A Note to Parents and Teachers

The Dorling Kindersley Readers series is a reading programme for children, which is highly respected by teachers and educators around the world. The LEGO Company has a global reputation for offering high quality, innovative products, designed to stimulate a child's creativity and development through play.

Now Dorling Kindersley has joined forces with The LEGO Company, to produce the first-ever graded reading scheme to be based around LEGO play themes. Each Dorling Kindersley Reader is guaranteed to capture a child's imagination, while developing his or her reading skills, general knowledge and love of reading.

The books are written and designed in conjunction with literacy experts, including Cliff Moon M.Ed., Honorary Fellow of the University of Reading.

Cliff Moon spent many years as a teacher and teacher educator, specializing in reading. He has written more than 140 books for children and teachers, and he reviews regularly for teachers' journals.

The four levels of Dorling Kindersley Readers are aimed at different reading abilities, enabling you to choose the books that are right for each child.

Level 1 – Beginning to Read Level 2 – Beginning to Read Alone Level 3 – Reading Alone Level 4 – Proficient Readers

The "normal" age at which a child begins to read can be anywhere from three to eight years old, so these levels are only guidelines.

In a faraway land,
in the middle of a dark forest,
there was a mighty castle.

King Leo and Queen Leonora lived in the castle, with their daughter, Princess Storm.

One day, the king decided to hold a feast at the castle.
There would be a tournament,
where knights could show their skill.

"It will be a wonderful day," King Leo told Queen Leonora.
"Only one thing can go wrong."
"I know," said the queen.
"Maybe Cedric the Bull,
the evil outlaw,
will attack today."

King Leo nodded.
"We must be ready,"
he said.

Castles

Castles were built in the Middle Ages.
People and animals were safe there,
if an enemy attacked.

It was almost time for the feast.
Knights put on their armour.
Children washed at the well.

Armour

Knights wore armour made of iron and steel for protection. Special hinges let them move their arms and legs!

Cedric the Bull watched from the dark forest.

He could see everyone getting ready.

“Not long now,” he told his deputy,
Gilbert the Bad.

“Let the tournament begin!”
called King Leo.
Richard the Strong took part in the first contest.
The horses galloped forwards.
The weapons clashed.
Sir Richard won.
“Well done!”
cheered the king.

Tournaments

In peacetime, knights trained by taking part in pretend battles, called tournaments.
Some fought with long spears, called lances.

Cedric the Bull and Gilbert the Bad hid behind the castle.

They had pushed an attack tower up to the thick wall.

“Why did you make it so heavy?” puffed Cedric.

“It has to carry twenty men,” said Gilbert.

“We need it to climb the castle wall. Then we can capture the castle!”

Attack!

Careful planning was needed for a surprise attack. Armies could not move quickly as the soldiers wore heavy armour and used huge weapons.

King Leo was cheering the knights when he heard a bugle call above the noise of the crowd.

"It's the signal," he told his family.

"The castle is under attack. But don't worry.

I have a plan," he said.

The king and his knights set off to deal with Cedric.

Cedric was a cowardly leader.
He did not really want to lead
his men up the tower.
“You must come, too,”
he told Gilbert.

The outlaws climbed the tower.
“Nearly there,” panted Cedric.
He looked up.
“Oh no! Yuk!”
he cried.
Smelly food and horse droppings poured onto the outlaws’ heads.

On top of the castle,
King Leo smiled.
“What a good plan,”
he laughed.

The king and his knights went to the Great Hall.

The queen was waiting for them,
but Princess Storm was missing.

"Where's my daughter?"
the king asked.

A knight slipped away.

He was called John of Mayne, and the princess was his friend.

He thought he knew where to find her.

Near the forest,
there was a garden.
It was where the princess sat,
when she felt sad.

Storm was unhappy because she wanted to be a knight, and help her father King Leo.
But girls were not allowed to be knights.

Women's lives

Women did not have much power. But when the men were away
fighting, the women did their work!

John could see the princess sitting in the garden.
Before he could call to her,
someone appeared from the trees.
It was Gilbert the Bad.
He pulled Storm into the forest.

Gilbert took the princess to the outlaws' hidden camp, where Cedric was waiting.

"I'm not afraid of you,"
said Storm, bravely.

"I don't care," replied Cedric.

"I want the king's money.

Your father will pay me a high price for your safe return."

Forests

In the Middle Ages, forests were much bigger than they are now. Wood from the trees was used to build carts, ships and homes.

A bugle call rang out in the forest.
It was a signal to Cedric.
"The king himself is looking for you!" he told Storm.

“While the king searches the forest, my outlaws will attack his castle!” said Cedric.

He sat down with Gilbert to plan the attack.

An outlaw kept watch in the treetops.

“I can see the king!” he called.

“He is lost in the forest.

It will take him hours to find his way out!”

Coat of arms

Each knight had his own coat of arms on his shield. He could be recognised when wearing armour.

Cedric and Gilbert were plotting, and they forgot to watch the princess.
Storm quietly escaped into the trees.

“She doesn’t matter,” said Cedric.
“Why ask for a little bit of treasure?
Now we can take it all!”

Soon, Cedric and the outlaws surrounded the castle.

They loaded a catapult with a rock.

“Fire!”
said Cedric.

Weapons of war

Swords and lances were no use for attacking a castle.
Instead, huge catapults hurled enormous rocks and did serious damage.

Then there came a shout.
The king rode out from the forest.
“You are surrounded!” he cried.
“Give up your weapons.”
said Cedric.

“It was a clever trick.
Sir Richard is wearing my armour!”
laughed the king.
“Now you are trapped!”

"I still have your daughter!"

Cedric lied to the king.

"Oh no, you don't!" called Storm, running out from the trees.

"Hooray!" cheered the knights.

The outlaws were taken away.

That night, in the dungeons,
the outlaws could hear the feast.
Everyone was very happy,
apart from the outlaws, of course.

"I'm not finished yet,"

Cedric said, in a horrible whisper.

"Just you wait, King Leo!

Just you wait!"

Knights and castles facts

A knight was a soldier, who rode a horse in battle. He fought for a lord or king.

Feasts were held in the Great Hall. They started early. People began eating by 11 o'clock in the morning. The meal lasted for hours.

A suit of armour cost about £50,000, in today's money. That is more than most sports cars!

Only boys from rich families were allowed to train as knights.

A boy started training to be a knight at the age of seven.

It could take a knight up to one hour to put on all his armour.

Most castles were built in a time called the Middle Ages. This lasted from around AD 450 to 1500.

The first castles were built from wood. It was easy to burn them down. So then, builders started to use stone.
